

AMBIENTE

Nel 2004 J. Michael Fay e Peter Ragg sorvolano l'Africa, fotografando il devastante impatto dell'uomo sull'ecosistema. The Megaflyover images are stunning. Fay spent more than a year taking 92,000 high resolution photographs of the continent. That project is described in Tracing the Human Footprint, an article in the September 2005 National Geographic.

I video:

<http://ngm.nationalgeographic.com/ngm/0509/feature1/multimedia1.html>

Basic Information:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/J._Michael_Fay

<http://www.nationalgeographic.com/field/explorers/michael-fay.html>

<http://events.nationalgeographic.com/events/speakers-bureau/speaker/michael-fay/>

Interviews:

http://news.nationalgeographic.com/news/2005/08/0817_050817_mikefay.html

<http://kids.nationalgeographic.com/Stories/PeoplePlaces/Interview-Mike-Fay>

La guerra dell'avorio:

<http://ngm.nationalgeographic.com/2007/03/ivory-wars/fay-text>

La guerra dell'avorio su Google Earth:

<http://google-mapping.blogspot.com/2007/02/la-guerra-dellavorio-in-google-earth.html>

In Africa again:

<http://news.mongabay.com/2007/0612-sudan.html>

In USA: The Redwood Transect

<http://www.rffi.org/Newsletters/2009MikeFay-CasparInn.html>