

DIRITTI UMANI

India's government has failed to enforce key human rights and environmental safeguards in the country's mining industry, Human Rights Watch said in a report released today. The 70-page report, "Out of Control: Mining, Regulatory Failure and Human Rights in India," finds that deep-rooted shortcomings in the design and implementation of key policies have effectively left mine operators to supervise themselves. This has fueled pervasive lawlessness in India's scandal-ridden mining industry and threatens serious harm to mining-affected communities. Human Rights Watch documented allegations that irresponsible mining operations have damaged the health, water, environment, and livelihoods of these communities. (...)
