

AMBIENTE

On 30 April 2012, outgoing President Dmitry Medvedev approved the "Principles of State policy in the area of environmental development of the Russian Federation for the period up to the year 2030".

Does the policy offer any prospects for a change to the better in Russia under President Putin, who resumed the office of Russia's President on 7 May 2012?

Interesting in the light of the Russia's refusal to commit to new obligations in international climate negotiations is that the document admits that "global environmental problems associated with climate change, biodiversity loss, desertification and other negative environmental processes" have an impact on Russia and its citizens.
